PASTORAL THEOLOGY: A Treatise on the Office and Duties of the Christian Pastor. With a Biographical Sketch of the Author.

'This treatise on the office and duties of a Christian pastor, by the late Professor Fairbairn, is well deserving thoughtful perusal. Throughout the volume, however, there is a tone of earnest piety and practical good sense, which finds expression in many profitable counsels, embodying the result of large experience and shrewd observation. . . . Much of the volume is devoted to the theory and practice of preaching, and this part we can most heartily commend; it is replete with valuable suggestions, which even those who have had some experience in the ministry will find calculated to make them more attractive and efficient preachers.'—Christian Observer.

Christian Dogmatics: A Text-book for Academical Instruction and Private Study. By J. J. VAN OOSTERZEE, D.D. Translated from the Dutch by JOHN WATSON WATSON, B.A., and MAURICE J. EVANS, B.A. Second Edition. (Hodder and Stoughton.)

Practical Theology: A Manual for Theological Students. By Professor J. J. VAN OOSTERZEE, D.D. Translated and Adapted for the Use of English Readers by MAURICE J. EVANS, B.A. (Hodder and Stoughton.)

These two volumes, of more than 600 pages each, are a portion of the noble series of text-books for colleges and universities which are being edited by Dr. Henry B. Smith and Dr. Philip Schaff, of New York, under the title of the "Theological and Philosophical Library." The subjects discussed in these volumes are so numerous, and, moreover, have been so often handled by other writers, that a review of them in this journal is obviously beyond our compass. It may be sufficient to say that the standpoint of the learned writer is thoroughly Christian, Protestant, Biblical, Evangelical, and Catholic. Dr. Oosterzee is familiarly known to English students by his "Manual of New Testament Theology," and by his interesting and conclusive lectures on the authorship and character of the Fourth Gospel. The classification of the cursus theologicus is very exhaustive. After an introduction on the study of dogmatics, he discusses apologetics, under the headings of Religion, Revelation, and Scripture. The view entertained by the writer seems to combine plenary and even verbal inspiration of Scripture in matters of faith, with numerous limitations, admissions, and modifications according to the circumstances and needs of the writers. The dogmatic superstructure involves the author in a broad enumeration and discussion of the doctrine of God, His nature and works; of Man, his original and present condition; of Soteriology, including the person of Christ (in which he includes the theanthropic rank), the redemptive work, and "the way of salvation;" the Church, and the Future.

Every chapter concludes with "points of inquiry" calculated to stimulate the student, and with a moderate supply of illustrative references. Dr. Van Oosterzee has not blended with his dogmatic treatment, as Dr. C. Hodge has done in his System of theology, the history of the several dogmas as held in successive periods in the history of the Church. The treatise is sensible rather than learned, practical and devout rather than philosophical or literary. The discussions reveal admirable temper, genuine unction, and fine tact.

The "Manual of Practical Theology" discusses the nature, call, education, and end of the Christian ministry, and includes, first of all, Homiletics, its history and development. The translator has here added some useful additional matter. The principle, materials, form, and delivery of the sermon come under review. The study of Homiletics leads the way to Liturgics. Under this term the whole theory of worship comes into review, and the term covers the principles underlying all evangelical worship, whether liturgical or voluntary, and descends to the discussion of the language, matter, gesture, and even the dress of the celebrant of Divine worship. Considerable space is devoted to the theory and history of Liturgics. After Liturgics, the Author treats of Catechetics; then Poimenics or the pastoral duties, are amply investigated, ending off with Haliotics (!), the duties of the fisherman of souls outside of the region of the pastor's own congregation.

The encyclopædic character of these treatises—particularly the second of them—permits the writer to treat with more or less of completeness almost every possible topic that emerges in the regions of pastoral and homiletical theology. The suggestions are helpful and sagacious, though we can scarcely resist the following "point for inquiry"—If a preacher or pastor needs so much practical advice as is here given him, and cannot evolve principles and methods of action for himself from his Biblical and theological studies and his religious life, can he be fit to occupy the position of a Christian pastor? We heartily recognize the fine spirit, extended research, sound sense, and Christian enthusiasm displayed in Dr. Van Oosterzee's voluminous contribution to theological science, and offer our thanks to the editors, translators, and publishers for these additions to the theological furniture of the young pastor.
